BARNARD

COLLEGE 1981

MORTARBOARD

Vol. 87

It was the best of times,
it was the worst of times,
it was the age of wisdom,
it was the age of foolishness,
it was the epoch of belief,
it was the epoch of incredulity,
it was the season of light,
it was the season of darkness,
it was the spring of hope,
it was the winter of despair.

—Charles Dickens
“A Tale of Two Cities”

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE CLASS OF 1981:

One of the greatest joys of serving as Acting President is being able to congratulate you on your graduation from Barnard.

Having fulfilled Barnard's degree requirements, you should feel proud of what you have accomplished — of having satisfied the tests of a rigorous undergraduate liberal arts program. You should go forward armed with the sense that you are well prepared for the next stages of your careers and confident of your ability to meet life's future demands. You should be buoyed too, by the realization that Barnard's alumnae have and will distinguish themselves in a variety of ways and that you now join the ranks of a proud and successful group of women who will be your friends and colleagues for life.

While your experiences at the College are necessarily individual, you also share a common experience. You have been blessed with college years in a world of relative peace, though not necessarily tranquility. Yours were the years of economic pressures, energy shortages and most recently of Americans being held hostage in Iran. I cannot foresee what the future shall bring, but I know that your Barnard experience will shape your approach to future events.

We hope that you will cherish your years here, and that you will continue to learn from and hold fast to the intellectual and human standards which the College seeks to foster. We hope too, that you will remain interested in the College and that you know that the College shall maintain its concern for you. Most of all, we wish you peace, happiness, good health, good fortune, and personal success.

Sincerely,

Who can say what new horizons lie before us if we can but maintain the initiative and develop the imagination to penetrate them?

Transition periods offer the mind an opportunity to delve into the past and decide upon the future. Graduation for most Barnard women does not symbolize a termination but a capricious time of conversion. Senior year and the interval until the "adult" world begins, be it with entrance to the career world or family life, lends itself to reflection: Who am I? Where did I come from? Where am I going?

As Barnard graduates we share some roots and experiences. We were part of the mosaic of Morningside women, part of the pencil-pushing academic environment.

As Barnard scholars we encountered the frustration of being a member of the vanguard of women yet the insult of lack of support from our male "allies" east of Broadway. On one hand we experienced being part of the seven sister colleges; yet, on the other hand, the metaphor of the ivy tower tempted and haunted us. We are expected to pursue traditionally male careers with success yet to remain feminine in line with the archaic patriarchal definition. For us the fruits of knowledge proved to be sweet yet sour.

We were urged to change ourselves and move beyond the structures of the female world to a wider one. Barnard proved to be the perfect setting for this personal change; yet when we tried to stimulate a wider revolution we discovered opposition from the university at large. It was, is, and will be our challenge to catalize society to incorporate women as equals to men both in the domestic and worldly spheres. Our greatest feat will be to find the goal at the end of society's maze, to develop and integrate the ideals we learned and the growth we experienced at Barnard into the "real world" beyond Barnard's gates.

We entered Barnard as diverse and varied individuals; we graduate as a unified composition who like a kaleidoscope, presents within its circle a multitude of patterns.

"Of all the heavenly gifts that mortal men commend, What trusty treasure in the world can countervail a friend?"

In the most profound meaning of friendship, we proudly dedicate our yearbook to Barbara Schmitter, Dean of Studies and Vice President of Student Affairs, in gratitude for her devotion to us, the student body. She personifies the Barnard spirit in her balance of human and educational values.

These lines I give thee so that if mankind
Recall me happily in years to come
And muse, some distant evening, on my name

עם ישראל חי

From Queen Esther to Rosalyn Yalow, the Jewish woman has always established a place for herself in history. We as Jewish women at Barnard are eager to emulate these role models. Barnard has enabled us to integrate our desire for academic achievement with our commitment to Judaism.

The Jewish experience at Barnard is one which is a joint endeavor with Columbia. One only has to step into the Jewish office at Earl Hall and glance at the calendar which lists the endless number of activities designed to serve the interests of the college community. Jewish activities don't only abound on the weekend; pick any night of the week and you can find some event taking place.

The year begins when an orientation is sponsored for incoming Jewish students. As the year progresses, the Council of Jewish Organizations, or the CJO as it is fondly called, buzzes with activity. In any given week, you could find yourself wavering between going to an Israeli movie sponsored by Kadima (the Zionist group on campus), a Sukkot party hosted by Yavneh (a religious student organization), or a rally sponsored by the Student Struggle for Soviet Jewry, organized to speak out against the oppression of Russian Jews. Various activities are scheduled during the day, keeping in mind the ever increasing commuter population. For example, the Nosh at Noon, which gives the harried commuter the opportunity to discuss topical Jewish issues and/or relax while munching on bagels and cream cheese (lox from Zabar's is just too expensive!). Over the weekend, the resident student is made to feel at home. Shabbat meals communely prepared are served to a large but intimate group of students who want to share in a spirited traditional Friday night meal.

Barnard is blessed with Jewish students from a wide range of backgrounds, from women who define their 'Jewishness' as ethnic rather than religious, to the denim skirted students who spent the year in Israel's Michlalah immersed exclusively in religious studies, to the women considering careers as Rabbis. For these women, there are a variety of Sabbath services offered which are sponsored by the Orthodox, Conservative and Reform groups.

For those interested in communal Jewish living, or others in search of a niche in the neighborhood, the Bayit is just the right place to be. A family atmosphere predominates with everyone assuming responsibility to maintain the spirit of daily Jewish life. If you're a Barnard woman who was lucky enough to get a dorm, you can eat to your heart's content on the Kosher meal plan, recently instituted in BHR, or join a Kosher suite in 600, 616 or Plimpton. It wasn't too long ago that a trip downtown to a Kosher deli, or a trek over to J.T.S. was the only option available to the famished student observing the dietary laws.

Not only does the college campus lend itself to Jewish life, but students are also fortunate enough to find themselves in New York City, which is one of the great centers of Jewish culture and activity. Many synagogues and institutions offer lectures, courses and events which are open to the student in search of a deeper understanding and appreciation of her Jewish identity.

la identidad latina en Barnard

Being a Hispanic student at Barnard is quite an accomplishment. A very small percentage of Hispanic-Americans go to college and the number of women doing so is even smaller. The fact that some of us attend a selective, academically demanding institution such as Barnard makes us pretty special. Aside from the pride and joy that stem from our success, we face certain challenges as we move from the world of our culture and community to that of American academia. As Rosa Alonso, '82, points out, "The people I went to high school with are still in town, working in stores and banks, getting married and divorced, as is often the norm in our communities. Choosing college and a career means that we've broken away from our culture to get the better part of Anglo culture, and to return to ours." "We're not breaking away totally. We've got an opportunity most of our Latin sisters don't have," remarked Magda Garcia, '81. For many of us, it is a challenge and a commitment to "make the best of it, bringing the best of both worlds back to the community."

The degree of support we get from our families is not something to be taken for granted either. While few of us at Barnard have had to deal with total opposition, there is sometimes a certain degree of reluctance on the part of our parents, faced with a daughter so determined to break with tradition. As Carmen Sanchez, '81, explains, "for Hispanics, if you're twenty-one, and not married, well . . .". "My father used to say, 'why do you have to want such a long career for a woman,' about my plans to go to law school. Now he's happy about it," remarks Rosa Alonso. Others such as Idalia Lopez, '82, are luckier: "My family is thrilled that I'm going to school. They won't accept anything less than a Ph.D., and they tell me that there's always time for marriage and children."

On a social level, life at Barnard is much more positive for most of us. While keeping our own cultural identity, we share and grow with our friends and classmates. "I'm very Hispanic, but I don't find my friends on that basis," states Idalia. "As a minority sponsor in Orientation, I wanted to do something for minorities on campus, something not be exclude others, but something from the Latin community to the freshman class." Carmen Sanchez adds, "Barnard provides an opportunity to mingle. I can choose to sit with someone because I want to, not because I'm Hispanic."

On an academic level, we often find that Barnard helps us grow, even in terms of our own culture and history, as we are given the opportunity to bridge the intellectual gap often found in our immigrant communities. "I felt I couldn't express myself in Spanish as I wanted to," explains Magda Garcia. "I took a Spanish course, and saw that there was more to it than language." However, "being a Hispanic is not the only perspective I come to class with. Being a woman is also very important to me; a lot depends on what end I'm feeling oppressed from that day," she quipped. Rosa Alonso added, "I was thrilled to be able to hear Borges, and shake hands with Cortazar. It's something I can relate to, and learn about my own culture." Carmen Sanchez agreed, "That's something Barnard gave me that I didn't have back in the ghetto — to be able to hear about someone like Cortazar."

Our aspirations don't end at graduation, either. Many of us have definite plans for professional careers, with an eye towards serving as role models for our communities, and for all women. As we look towards the future, we know we will remember Barnard as a place for challenges and growth, and will feel very proud to have left the mark of our efforts in Barnard's history.

The Chinese enrollment in Columbia University and Barnard College is a sizeable one, and it makes up an integral part of the community on the two campuses. Chinese students, however, do not come from identical backgrounds. Basically three main geographical categories can distinguish most Chinese students. First, there are those who were brought up in America with a relatively heterogeneous upbringing. At home, Chinese culture is practiced; away from the home mostly Western culture is taught. Second, there are students from Hong Kong whose views of Chinese heritage are influenced by a very cosmopolitan, Western lifestyle that exists in the British colony. Finally, there are students who were brought up in Taiwan, yet another land of Chinese tradition and experience, whose people make up the third main sector of a most interesting Chinese community at Columbia and Barnard. Included this year also are approximately forty scholars from the People's Republic of China.

Since all Chinese students share a common cultural heritage, it is also important to achieve a certain cohesiveness among the members of this community. This cohesiveness is necessary for students to organize in sharing and presenting their common culture. And because the Chinese students hold different views of the same culture, their interactions enrich and bring more meaning to Chinese traditions. The desire to organize, which overcomes the general reluctance of Chinese students to be involved in such matters, is concretely represented in the existence of the Chinese Students' Club, which has become the center of activities in the Chinese community. It is therefore impossible to mention the Columbia-Barnard Chinese community without taking into account the CSC. Over the years this club has been the source of enjoyable extracurricular and social activities which are important to students in an academically demanding environment.

The CSC has two primary functions: to promote Chinese culture and to facilitate an interesting social environment for its members as well as enthusiastic nonmembers. Events sponsored by the CSC work toward these two goals. For example, the Welcome Fest held soon after Freshman Orientation included a culture show, a Peking duck dinner, and a disco. Deans and several faculty members were invited to acquaint students with Columbia's faculty. In the Mid-Autumn Festival Chinese mooncakes were served under moonlight to commemorate this traditional celebration. And the biggest event was the festival, honoring Chinese New Year. In addition there was the basketball team, the movie presentations, the bowling and social hours, and work on the annual publication — the CSC Bulletin.

In particular, the CSC has enjoyed its unique status of having members from very diverse geographical backgrounds. Such diversity has given its members greater opportunities for a better setting to appreciate their common cultural heritage. In this time of a growing awareness of the Chinese culture, it is appropriate and very significant that the CSC play such an important role in the activities of Chinese students. Its success is not only commensurate with its goal and title, it is also a salubrious element to a more lively atmosphere at Columbia University and Barnard College.

BLACK AT BARNARD

"Besides the waters of the Hudson I feel my race. Among the thousand white persons, I am a dark rock surged upon and over swept, but through it all, I remain myself. When covered by the waters I am; and the ebb reveals me again."

Zora Neale Hurston, one of Barnard's most distinguished alumna and the first Black graduate, expressed her feelings about attending Barnard in the above quote. Barnard College is not without a history of Black women. Unfortunately the stories of Zora Neale Hurston and other Black women who succeeded her at Barnard have not been relayed to women attending the school many years after Hurston.

The four years spent at Barnard represents an implementing process of those ideals and gains struggled for by many black women in Barnard's past. A knowledge of this past reveals the diversity of this college. Barnard is a composite of many individuals who bring to this unique atmosphere all their personal reference points. For many a group of women being an individual means being a Black woman. But each of these Black women is an outgrowth of different perspectives within the Black culture. This individuality and sense of self is what Hurston spoke of in her statement. And the Barnard Organization of Black Women has grown with the times and development of Black at Barnard in order to answer to a need for many Black Women at Barnard to express themselves in an environment of understanding beyond the educational.

Barnard Organization of Black Women was born of the struggles of the sixties and early seventies. This period in the college's history marked the beginning of a more active recruiting program for minority students, increasing the number of Black women per class. This higher concentration of Black women created a stronger feeling of a Black presence on campus. Therefore many Black women felt a need for a gathering place, a place for Black women to address themselves as Blacks but most importantly reconciling that with our position as women.

Through the sixties and seventies B.O.B.W. helped many women work out their feelings about entering predominately white schools. The eighties will be a time of resolving our feelings of being a part of a larger Black culture but recognizing all the variations on that theme as well as realizing ourselves as women within that culture and within Barnard.

"Where do you go to school?"

"Barnard."

"Where?"

"It's the female part of Columbia."

You answer wearily, one more time, and wish to God they'd finally get it right. But you kind of understand. After all, you thought more of going to Columbia yourself, a year or two or three back. It's only when you've been here a while that you begin to recognize the importance of a woman's school — of Barnard — and of being a woman, after all.

BEARS AND LIONS REVISITED

During my four years at Barnard, I think the one complaint I most frequently heard was that there is "no social life" on the Columbia and Barnard campuses. Many students, especially College men, support the proposed merger of the two institutions, believing that this would better the social situation. This is one Barnard senior who thinks that is ridiculous. If students from either college have not met congenial members of the opposite sex, it just might be because they are too lazy to leave their rooms and cross Broadway; many of us live in co-ed dorms and need not do even that!

We live in a great city, vibrant with energy and life, and New York is undoubtedly one of Columbia's greatest assets. A night downtown can not be compared to a night on campus, but I have found that the reverse can be true as well. Most of us can not afford to go downtown very frequently; so why is time to study so hard to find?

There is always something to do on campus; there is always something going on. Life here has very much improved in just the last couple of years. Programming is now done on a larger scale and events are of a higher quality. The large programming organizations, Barnard's McAc and Columbia's Board of Managers, are open to all students and hold events open to the whole campus community. At least two films are screened weekly, frequently three and sometimes even four. Dances of all sorts take place on weekends: rock & roll, disco, sixties, fifties, live bands, other theme, no theme, etc. Events can be as varied as a roller disco or a candlelight cafe.

There are more clubs to join and more possibilities of starting new ones than ever before. Clubs have their own socials and parties as well, so that their members can get to know each other in a friendly atmosphere, or just meet other students who share similar interests, though they may or may not have the time to join a club.

Dorms are still sponsoring regular brunches, happy hours and floor parties, all aimed at a closer-knit student body, and a happier college community. Although dorm events tend to be oriented towards its residents, the rest of the campus is always invited and welcome to join in whatever event it may be running. New features, such as the BHR Coffeehouse and the Reid commuter lounge have been recent additions to the Barnard scene.

So why don't students meet?

For the student who is willing to get involved, for the student who is willing to go out and meet other students, our joint campuses offer ample occasions to do so. Our university is a very special place, with an atmosphere all its own. Those of us who tried, rather than just expected, to go out and meet people and have a good time during our stay here, will be sorry to leave what has become our second home — our campus.

However, a "social life" has to be sought out, it does not just happen suddenly, does not come knocking on your Carman door. Accepting women into Columbia College will not make socializing any easier, or friends easier to find. Time spent complaining about a lack of campus life would be better spent "hanging out" on the steps!

Before I came to Barnard, I thought I was capable of accomplishing a lot. Through my experiences of the past four years, I feel now that I can tackle any challenge.

Courses for my double major, involvement on the fencing team and in student government and activities programming (BOM), have made my college years an exciting experience.

As captain of the Varsity Fencing Team, I begin my day at 7 A.M. with an hour long run near my home. This is followed by studying or errands, depending on my class schedule. I then have a half-hour ride on the IRT to my classes, which continue through the afternoon. At 4 o'clock until 7 in the evening, I have fencing practice. Meets are usually scheduled for Wednesday and weekends.

College is a time for growing, and I have grown during my four years at Barnard.
Ann Ryan, '81, Economics/Political Science ♦

I've tried to look at commuting, not as a drudgery, but as an experience. Coming from White Plains on the 7:14 train each morning and spending one and a quarter hours on my three-train ride to school admittedly seems like a big hassle. I've tried to use this time profitably, however, by doing my schoolwork and by relaxing.

Typically, I arrive at school at 8:30 to chat with friends and then to trek to the library. By 6 P.M. at the latest I'm back in White Plains with ample time to rest and study. Sure there were times I wished I lived on campus (and could just roll out of bed and into class), but overall, I realize that I've had a greatly varied and enriched lifestyle. The opportunity to keep old home friends and close family ties, while branching out to meet new college friends in New York City, has been a unique advantage.

Donna Yanofsky, '81, Political Science ♦

I have been a member of the Varsity Swimming/Diving Team for the past three years. To get to practice on time, I'm out of the house and into the car by 6 A.M. Practice runs from 6:30 to 8:30, Monday through Friday, then I'm off to my morning classes.

I take a Senior Life Saving course twice a week, and three times a week I have weightlifting. Afternoons and evenings are devoted to studying. Meets are held Fridays, with some meets taking the team away for part of the weekend. Sundays, from 3:30 to 5:00, I have — you guessed it — team practice!

Finding energy to play on a team, to commute, and to study is not always easy. Although commuting itself may not be much fun, I can enjoy the conveniences of home. Since my family is very close, we enjoy spending time together. While enjoying an active campus life, I'm able to meet with my friends who attend other local colleges and to spend time with them, too.

Maryanne Cunningham, '82, European History ♦

My day begins with the blaring of my clock radio at 6:00 A.M. Depending on my energy level (which usually corresponds to the day of the week), I drag myself out of the house anywhere between 7:00 and 7:20 and get into my car. By 8:10 I'm scooting around Broadway, looking for a spot to park my car and usually snarling at smaller cars. If I'm lucky I get a spot on Broadway, if I'm really lucky, on Claremont Ave., and, otherwise, on 120th Street where I have to sit in the car until 9:00, thanks to alternate side restrictions. Once I am at school, I'm just like any other Barnard student. That, I think, is the key to commuter life at Barnard: we are all Barnard students, and most commuters would like more people to realize that. I go to any event on campus that I want to, I am as interested in what goes on here as anyone is, I just sleep 13 miles away. I am now a Barnard Admissions Office Tour Guide, I wrote for a brief time on Bulletin and was a member of Commuter Action in my freshman and sophomore years. I, like most commuters, have my share of school spirit, and my share of gripes, but I guess if the good didn't outweigh the bad I wouldn't still be here. My days are filled with classes and I work for the Barnard archivist. I am an American history major and my days are therefore filled with thesis research. If there is no meeting, party or other event that I want to attend, I go home and the next day begins with the blaring of my clock radio at 6:00 A.M. Depending on my energy level . . .

Karen Frieman, '81, American History ♦

Are you a commuter?

Pacifier also doubles as costume jewelry and is 100% mugger proof.

A brown paper lunch bag for that ultra student look.

The only New Yorker who still listens to the weather report.

An instrument case (may be empty) for that "interesting personality" look.

The all new "commuter phone." Allows you to keep professors posted on your traveling progress. A small beeper will be available next fall.

Handy pouch for tokens, tissues, and garlic (because you really don't want that bum to sit next to you).

A honey bear for company on that long and boring trip.

Sneakers make me faster than a speeding BMT, more powerful than an IRT.

Rate your commuter status:

Do you:

1. Spend more money on tokens than you do on your lunch?
2. Know the initials of the subways better than the initials of your own name?
3. Enjoy the companionship of a rat?

4. Have you ever set out for school and wound up at Bloomingdale's instead?
5. Do bus and/or train doors habitually close in your face?
6. Despite your rushing are you often ten minutes late to that first class, including (especially?), mid-term and final days?

7. Do the birds chirping in the morning annoy you more than the screeching brakes of the M.T.A. trains?

7½. Do these screeching noises relax you and induce sleep?

7¾. If yes (to the above question), "Are you crazy?"

8. Do you think you know everything there is to know about New York City?

Asian Journal

The Asian Journal is an annual Barnard/Columbia publication. Our purpose is to foster a greater understanding of the problems, interests and experiences of the diverse and multi-ethnic Asian community in America. We aim for a high quality aesthetic presentation as well as intellectual diversity. Current conflicts of Asian identity and status within ethnic and American communities are considered, along with reflections on heritage and custom, through the essays, poetry, short stories, art work and photographs of our contributors. 1981 is the fifth year of our existence.

Barnard-Columbia Chorus

The Barnard-Columbia Chorus is a 60-member chorus comprised of two smaller groups. The Barnard-Columbia Chambers Singers, and The Dean's Chorus. While the combined chorus sings large works with orchestra (like the Bach Magnificat and the Haydn Drum Mass of last year's concerts), the Chamber Singers devote themselves to a more intimate and modern repertoire. The Dean's Chorus is designed to improve sight-singing and musical skills through a reading program. Toward the end of each semester, the two groups join to perform as the Barnard-Columbia Chorus.

Members of the Chorus have the opportunity to sing in small ensembles and madrigal groups. Further, the Chorus members receive semi-private voice instruction. The Barnard-Columbia Chorus also enjoys an active social life, including trips to other universities for joint concerts. In past years the Chorus has travelled to Tufts, Dartmouth, and the University of Virginia.

Barnard/Columbia Community Youth Program

The Barnard/Columbia Youth Program is a volunteer organization dedicated to the children of the University community. This includes the counselors and tutors in the program, and the students of P.S. 179 on 102nd St. and Amsterdam Ave. CYP operates two different programs to bring these kids together. The first, tutoring involves a one-to-one relationship between the college student and the elementary school child. By giving an hour or two a week, members of this program can help a kid learn to read or add, and offset the overcrowding in New York City schools. The other program, recreation, runs trips every Saturday for groups of neighborhood kids. Working in groups of two or three counselors and about ten elementary school kids, we visit museums, tourist attractions, theaters, and parks around New York City. For the college student, the program offers an opportunity to see the city, and to go out and play for one day a week. For the kids, CYP is a chance to get out of their neighborhood and have fun every Saturday.

Barnard Glee Club

"In recognition of the fact that every well-equipped college must have its Glee Club, as well as the philanthropic desire of providing some means of working off superfluous energy, and of occupying a small portion of the spare time and money with which, it is well known, Barnard students are so amply provided, a few enterprising spirits of the undergraduate association called a meeting in February, for the purpose of discussing the feasibility of some such organization. The appeal met with an enthusiastic response, and the following week the hitherto voiceless Glee Club took its place in Barnard life."

This editorial appeared in Mortarboard 1897 and marked the beginning of the Barnard Glee Club. Since then, it has encountered many obstacles in its struggle for existence, including its discontinuation for several years.

In the past few years, Glee Club has experienced several changes in conductors, along with changes in music selections, membership, and general club philosophy. This year, the Glee Club consists of fifteen women from Barnard and Columbia. Our conductor, Anne Allman, is a professional singer who is presently earning her doctorate degree at Teacher's College. We are working on various selections of classical and folk music, along with madrigals and college songs. We have two scheduled concerts, one in the fall, the other in the spring, and in addition, two performances at old age homes, a sing-along in Brooks Living Room, and an Alumnae dinner performance. Through these concerts, and the club itself, we provide an opportunity for women of Barnard and Columbia to express themselves musically. We hope that the tradition of the Barnard Glee Club will endure for many years to come.

The Barnard Literary Magazine

The Barnard Literary Magazine provides the opportunity for women students to develop editorial skills while it also provides a showcase for the works of student writers. The Literary Magazine is published each spring. This year we sponsored poetry and prose readings by students and by established women writers.

Black Heights is a literary magazine which offers a Black perspective, through the exploration of new avenues of culture awareness. We feel that through Black Heights magazine, the Black students are able to express themselves artistically as well as gain experience in journalism. Not only does Black Heights reach out to the undergraduates, but also to Alumni. In the past, Black Alumni have submitted material to Black Heights for publication.

During the academic year, we cover a majority of Black cultural events which are sponsored by various organizations. Some organizations present lectures and symposiums that we as Blacks feel are opportunities to gather knowledge in different areas, as well as make career oriented contacts.

Black Heights is published once a year during the Spring semester. We feel that Black Heights is an enlightening contribution to the Barnard/Columbia community.

The CSC has two primary functions: to promote Chinese culture and to facilitate an interesting social atmosphere for its members as well as for enthusiastic non-members. Events sponsored by the CSC work toward these two goals. Activities this year included basketball competitions, movie presentations, bowling and social hours, and work on the annual publication the "CSC Bulletin." Major events included the Welcomfest held soon after Freshman Orientation which included a culture show, a Peking duck dinner, and a disco. Deans and several faculty members were invited to acquaint students with Columbia's faculty. In the Mid-Autumn Festival, Chinese mooncakes were served under moonlight to commemorate this annual holiday tradition. In addition, the biggest event was the festival honoring the Chinese New Year.

The CSC has especially enjoyed its unique status of having members with very diverse geographical backgrounds. Such diversity has given its members a broader understanding and appreciation for their common cultural heritage. In this time of a growing awareness of the Chinese culture, it is appropriate and very significant that the CSC plays such an important role in the activities for Chinese students. Its success is not only commensurate with its goal and title; it is also a valuable contribution to a livelier and more enriching cultural atmosphere in Columbia University and Barnard College.

College Activities Office

The College Activities Office sees to the daily running of McIntosh Center. The office is an information and resource center for clubs and other student groups. It is responsible for taking care of student mailboxes, room reservations, and various recreational services, such as the darkroom, the bowling alley, the Ticket Booth, and electronic games.

Concert Committee

Two years ago we brought you David Johansen, last year it was Graham Nash, this year, who knows? Plans are well underway for our third annual Barnard Rock concert, presented live from our very own gym. The committee was formed two years ago to bring first rate entertainment to the Barnard campus and the Columbia University community. So far, we have kept our promise and done just that. Even though we are located in the Big Apple and have to compete with the likes of the Garden, the Palladium, the Capitol Theatre, and other such bastions of the rock era, Barnard College will not be intimidated. You want Blondie? You want Bruce? No problem, because Barnard Concerts is out there doing everything we can to get them. Okay, so we are not always successful, but we try. Barnard campus rocks on: Ron Delsner, eat your heart out . . .

The Education Confrontation Club

The Education Confrontation Club, as its name implies, was developed for the purpose of identifying and approaching the controversial issues surrounding education. Although the club is new born, and has not yet grown to its full potential, it has already tackled problematic issues in the field of education. Such issues include, Bilingual Education, problems with the UFT and other teachers unions, and career-employment opportunities for teachers.

The club usually sponsors discussion groups and forums on such controversial topics. These forums are stimulating, thought-provoking, and lively. We are striving for alumni and community involvement in our activities.

We welcome members or interested individuals. Being a member of the Education Program is not a prerequisite for membership in the Education Club, however, we do work with the Education Program.

Gilbert and Sullivan Society

The Gilbert and Sullivan Society produces two shows a year for the Barnard/Columbia community. 1981 marks our thirty-first year of quality productions brought about by 30-50 performers and technicians each semester. We have brought to campus a wide range of famous names, from opera singers Rita Shane and Lorna Haywood, to Sha-na-na's "Bowser," John Bowman.

Dressed for the production of Sorcerer.

Greek American Organizations

Three years ago, a new student organization emerged at Barnard. Its members were individuals of the Barnard/Columbia community sharing a common background and/or interest in the Greek culture. The Greek Americans did not come together in order to be isolated or excluded from the rest of the student body, but to add to the cultural mosaic already present here. We are part of a large University sharing similar interests and goals with our fellow students, but at the same time we are able to maintain our individuality and enjoy the privileges of our culture. In this respect the GAO contributes to Barnard's effort to provide a sense of identity for its students. In addition, it receives Columbia College's support in its effort to grow, and thus serves the needs of its members more adequately.

All of us at the Greek American Organization extend our warmest wishes to the class of '81, for a successful future.

MaAC

The McIntosh Activities Council was conceived eleven years ago when the Millicent McIntosh Center was dedicated. McAC grew from a small, central planning board to a council with an executive governing board and eight standing committees. In addition, McAC serves as the House Committee of McIntosh Center, providing student representation regarding the center's physical aspects in addition to recommendations for usage. McAC's goal is to provide students with a multitude of diverse social events, and to serve as sounding board for student input concerning decisions effecting McIntosh.

The McAC board officers and its eight standing committees chairpersons are as follows:

President—Michelle A. Grosz
 Vice President—Paula Cornacchia
 Treasurer—John Vassos
 Secretary—Maria Saketos
 Commuter Action—Esther Diamant
 Cultural Events—Dino Carlaftes

Recreational Athletic Association

Here you see us . . . eight of the busiest people on campus. First, we had to find time to meet, (Thursdays at noon, of course, a three-year tradition now), and then came the events. We made it! Through two sets of intramurals, two student-faculty games, the Swim Clinic, the Orientation Fun-Run, the New Games at the Spring Festival, and the big R.A.A. Fun-Run in the spring. Everyone did something. In no order of importance thank you to Cindy Babski, for taking care of those all-important "munchies"; Claudia Cambell, for filling in at the last minute wherever and whenever necessary; Jean Follansbee, our faculty advisor, for never getting discouraged, always having time, and always coming up with new ideas; Ellen Hammer, for processing floods of requisitions neatly and promptly; Beth Hardiman, for not only taking on the often heartbreaking work of getting the Gymnastics Club together, but also volunteering to handle publicity; Lisa Macagnone, for reorganizing the Soccer Club, though initially without soccer balls or practice-time; Jean Pedersen, for always getting everything organized and finished on time somehow, despite last-minute panic; and Janice Roven, for taking faithful minutes and coping with the intricacies of getting them copied and distributed. A hectic year, but one worth remembering. Look out for us next year . . . we are coming on strong!

Spanish Club

The purpose of the Spanish club is multi-faceted. It provides members with an informal atmosphere to converse in Spanish, as well as familiarize students with Peninsular and Hispanic culture. It is also a channel through which students of similar cultural backgrounds meet and work jointly to establish communication among themselves and the Community.

This semester the club has worked on the publication of the Spanish Magazine. We are looking forward to this and hope that it will be an opportunity for those who want to publish their Spanish material, and for those who want to improve their writing skills in Spanish. Another major project that we have been working on is the Latin American Cultural Day. The purpose of this event is to inform the Barnard/Columbia community as well as the outside community of the cultural and political reality in Latin America. We have also sponsored other events which include: speakers, films, and plays.

Science-Fiction Society

The Science-Fiction Society began quite humbly in February 1976 with twenty members, which dwindled steadily until May. The present seniors joined the following September at orientation. Thanks to this influx of new energy, and empty hands, the club began to move on Columbia.

We began a small magazine containing our own works of fiction, fantasy, and art. Several names were proposed for our first literary endeavor, but the editor overruled us all and it was named Sol Three. The first issue came out uneventfully, and promised perhaps a second issue for the next term. A year later Sol Three #2 arrived, despite late contributions, edited by Richard Lappin. Sol Three #3 almost aborted, but it did eventually join its predecessors, thanks to Jana Schulman. In 1978, Charles Seelig began our other publication, CUS-FuSsing, the club's newsletter. It has now completed 28 issues, which have gone to ten foreign countries as well as across the United States.

For three years, 1978-80, we held a Science-Fiction convention called Apricon. We packed one day with speakers, films, dealers, and game events. Apricon I made a staggering .40¢ profit, but Apricon III put that to shame when it made .70¢. The difference was probably caused by our guest speaker, Roger Zelazny in 1980, rather than a clerical error. This year we have voted on a speaker series and parties rather than the convention. Our other distinguishing events include the landmark two-year presidency of Susan Kahn, a private lending library of over 4,000 books and magazines, and the acquisition of our own office this past September. The B-C S-F S can now boast a membership of 30-40 crazies, who are aware of, and creating the future.

Upstart

Upstart is the arts journal of Barnard and Columbia Colleges, but it is more than a magazine. Established in 1977, Upstart has since incorporated a series of poetry readings, art exhibitions and smaller theme magazines into the annual publication of Upstart, the magazine. Upstart provides a forum for student artists, writers and critics in the fields of visual arts, literature, music, architecture, and magazine production.

Women in Health Careers

The Women in Health Careers Club is a traditional Barnard Organization. In its second year of re-establishment, the club provides Barnard students with an overview of the health professions offered to women today. The club has met with many distinguished speakers and provides a social and educational service for its members.

Being on the Archery team is sometimes hard:

- getting up at 4 a.m. Saturday to wash your all white uniform at the last minute before the team leaves at 6 A.M.
- confidently missing only one practice and returning to find that you have to start all over again and your back hurts

But always worth the struggle:

- learning how your body works
- making friends from other teams at a tournament and seeing them again at every tournament after that
- sharing stories with your own teammates on a four hour van ride

And every so often, absolutely incredible:

- shooting that perfect shot and knowing, for a moment, that you can do anything in the world or out of it.

Volleyball at Barnard is not what one could term the typical collegiate sport experience. As in all sports at Barnard a person finds herself not among a group of recruited, highly experienced, single-minded athletes but amongst a complex mixture of women. It is this diversity of talent and motivation which makes volleyball at Barnard the unique experience that it is. The expected goal of sport is winning and volleyball is no exception. Winning, however, is a matter of definition. It is at that point when six highly individual athletes become a single working unit on the court that those women can be termed winners. This year Barnard Volleyball contained four seniors — all of which are winners.

What is it that causes thirteen dreary and sleepy eyed individuals to endure seemingly endless weeks of 7 A.M. practice, torturous double suicides, and painful windsprints? It isn't for everyone, but why is it for those who participate? What is the attraction? There must be some compelling reason for those who risk injuring their bodies, friendships, and their G.P.A.'s to play game after game in pursuit of that ever evasive "thrill of victory." For some, Barnard Basketball provides the ever needed physical release; for others an excuse to avoid the library. But for all, it affords an opportunity to learn and grow and to witness the development of thirteen unfamiliar individuals into a cohesive team. Hidden beneath the bruised knees, battered egos, and endless frustration is a glimmer of satisfaction — knowing that we had the courage to play and the desire to succeed as part of a small, yet rapidly growing athletic program.

TENNIS

Karen Adler

Despite not having their own courts to play on, and having to hold workouts at 6 A.M. Barnard's tennis team plays on strongly. Much of their success is due to their energetic and dedicated coach. Much is due the love and respect for one another. And naturally, most is pure talent.

SWIMMING

I am in an endless contest with my body, pressing it, forcing it to its limits, demanding that it endure the pain of being developed. I complete my regular workout and push my body yet one notch further, to test its endurance. And as the weariness of overuse begins to settle in my legs or my arms, it is my mind that disciplines my limbs, insisting on nothing short of supreme loyalty to my goal of attaining a healthy, fit body.

It has become almost cliché at universities — the image of the student athlete. On a competitive and a non-competitive basis, the merits of physical education are hailed by students and faculty alike. And while I nod when those who consider themselves "serious athletes" complain about the trendy, Sunday joggers congesting the track, I am really glad to see that my English literature professor manages to squeeze a daily run into his routine.

All too often in an institution that focuses its major efforts on intellectual prowess, one tends to regard her body as merely another object, to be utilized as one does a typewriter or a library catalogue. My body? Oh, yes. It's in my room, somewhere between my desk lamp and my pot of marigolds. It comes in handy when the bus is late and I have to walk to my appointment of the day.

But my body is really an extension of my mind. It is an expression of my desire to create a sound discipline in my life. As I push my legs against metal plates, striving to raise a set of weights higher, I can see the sinuous definition in the muscles. Often, when I am at the point of near exhaustion and my mind summons the power to force my body forward, I wonder if the pleats in my brain are as developed as those in my calves. I wonder sometimes if my cerebellum is tired of coordinating my muscular activity. And I am curious if the endless stream of sweat that rolls off my forehead is the result of a tired mind or a tired body.

Then I realize that I am my body as I am my mind. I am a conglomerate of nerves, tissues and muscles that intertwine, tangle and work to join together the parts of my being to form what I can become.

And so we may venture to assert that anyone who can produce the perfect blend of the physical and the intellectual sides of education and apply them to the training of character, is producing music and harmony . . .

But, much too soon, exam period is here. Suddenly there is no time. Day rushes into night, and back into day. Some students sleep from six a.m. until noon and then are off again. A dormitory is more than any other single college building — house, library or lecture hall. The atmosphere of the dormitory both causes and reflects the moods and attitudes of the residents. Important, at first, for its novelty, the dormitory gradually melts into the background and re-emerges only just before leaving it for the last time. Because it is the place where emotions and memories of college life are stored, the dormitory becomes both an escape and an object to be escaped.

MCATs, LSATs, GMATs, and GREs are funny animals. They can turn senior year into a miserable period of depression or a hopeful trip on cloud nine. Before the actual wave of acceptances, rejections, and those wretched wait lists are mailed out, seniors go through an eternity of soul searching and religious rituals. "Please God, let's forget the Orgo 'C' and remember the old lady I helped cross the street."

Mail opening becomes a ceremony of trepidation. Shakey hands become a common symptom along with the return of the freshman wobbly knees syndrome. The wavering rise and decline of pre-professional seniors' self evaluations can only be compared with the Dow Jones. Far away cities, menial jobs, and that trip to Europe look more and more appealing as the acceptance-less weeks roll by. A common reference point for these seniors is memories of the good old days before Stanley Kaplan's.

Seniors are no longer divided between commuters and residents; the new battle is pre-professional vs. pre-employment. Who can think of the going salary for business executives when an acceptance to the Wharton School of Business may be in the mail? Who can be bothered skimming over Career Service files when she can be scanning the pages of Black's Law Dictionary or Gray's Anatomy?

Standardized exams . . . whose standards? Probably a bunch of nerds up in Princeton concocted these terrifying exams to revenge all seniors who enjoyed college . . . wouldn't you "Have you heard from Harvard yet?"

"No, I haven't gotten rejected so I've still got my fingers crossed."

"Judy got in and Pam's on hold. Are you nervous?"

"How'd you do on the boards?"

"Pretty well."

"Well enough to land you safely in P. & S.?"

know it, I had to love Barnard!

Pre-professional students have a tendency to fixate on the graduate school they hope to attend. They eat, drink, sleep, and yes, breath professional school. They can only look at the future as part of a master plan of the graduate school "Placer" who determines their fate as to where they'll end up.

These seniors believe that GPAs, boards, and activities make up only a small percentage of the qualifications for professional schools; there's a lot of those unknown factors, gray areas, involved along with the mental health and state of intoxication of the admissions board to take into account.

All in all, the senior scene is not so dismal; after all, those students not planning to attend graduate school are caught up with on campus recruiting interviews. And best yet, by the time Senior Week and Graduation roll by, all the seniors are pegged in the little boxes they'll call "life" for at least the next year.

Incompletes to complete — yearbook pictures to select — and diploma cards to file. Plus, of course, the inevitable applications and/or resumes to pore over, cry over, die over? And please — don't mention my senior thesis. Some things are better left unsaid.

Let us just say that one more class of seniors is about to depart — if we can ever get around to arranging it.

Admissions Standards

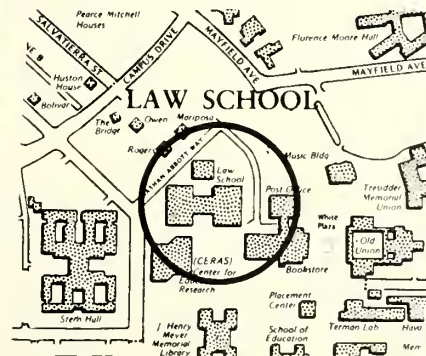

The impulse to achieve status is a very powerful force, perhaps especially in an open society such as ours. Law school applicants are not exempt from that impulse, and may even be especially animated by it, so closely is it related to professional goals.

210. Business Associations. An examination of the state and federal law pertinent to corporations and, to a lesser extent, partnerships as business entities.

In times of transition, individuality is often compromised. 1980 is most definitely a transition era at Barnard College; the question of merger hangs over us all.

One thing to keep in mind, however, is that any merger is just in the pre-natal stage and its birth is not at all certain. Barnard is still an independent women's college with independent facilities and clubs.

Barnard Students Speak Against Merger at Forum

Lehecka calls College 'hostage' to Barnard

"There is co-education available to both Barnard and Columbia College students," said Anne Koshel, another student who spoke. "Barnard is a place for women to grow among women."

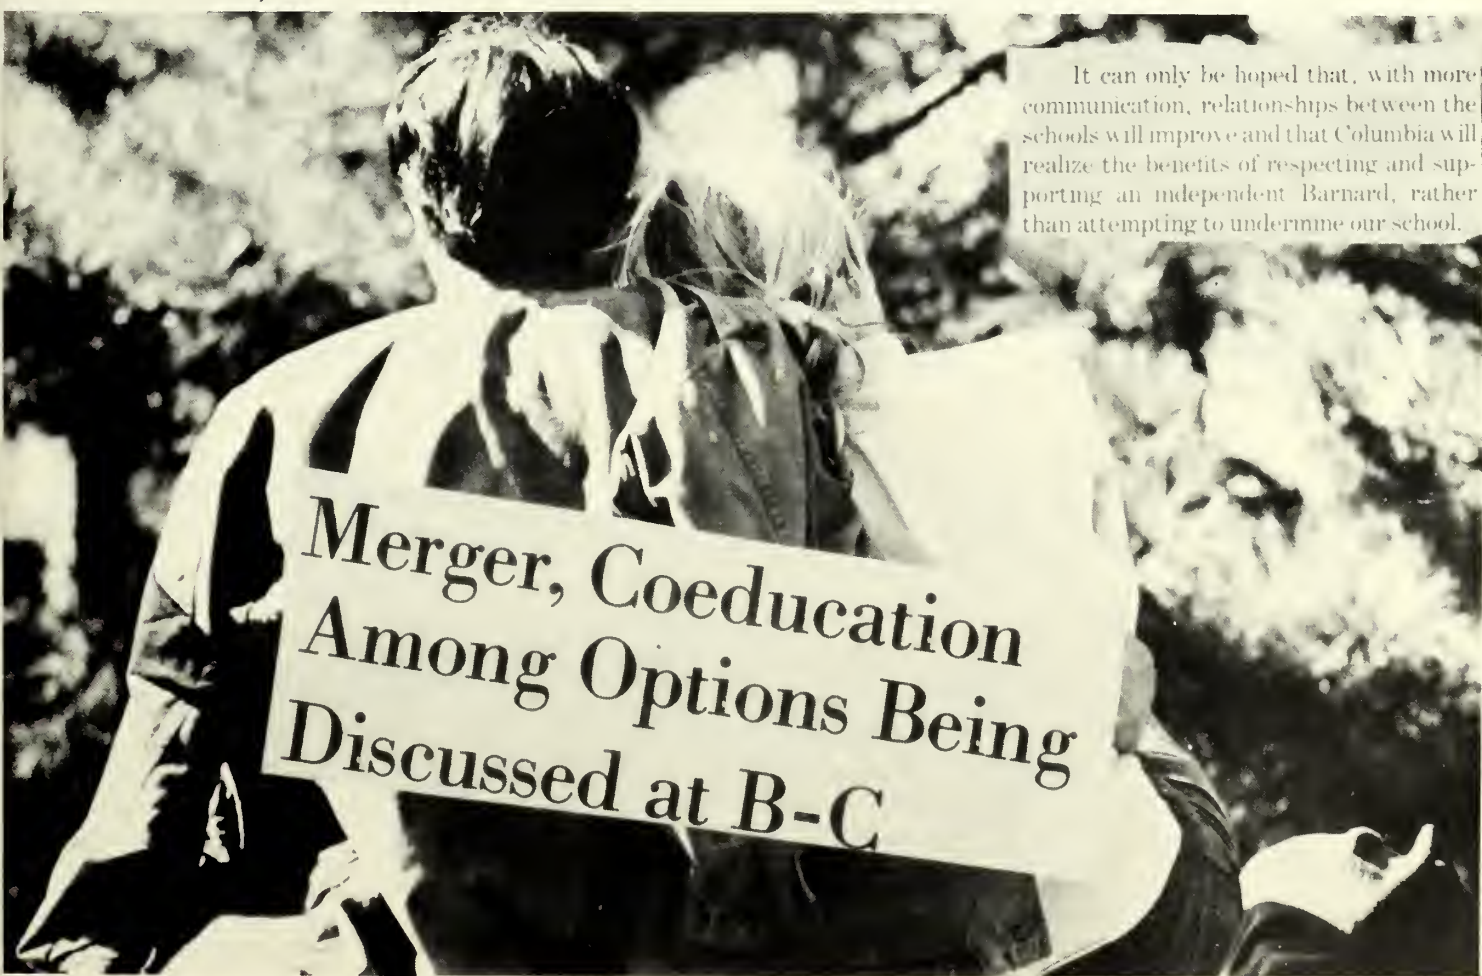

Columbia claims that they have to accept approximately half of their applicants and that their applicant pool is too small. Apparently, by admitting women to their school Columbia administrators believe that more male students will be encouraged to apply and that they can be more selective in the Admissions Office.

Please note the reasoning here. The Columbia Admissions Office has no other reason for admitting women to their college except to use these women to attract men. At a university where sexism runs rampant, this is one of the most outrageous statements to which we have recently been subjected. Columbia has not stopped to think that the presence of women might not be the problem. Those applying to the freshman class at Columbia College are given the impression that the presence of Barnard across the street makes Columbia "just like a coed school." They have no reason to think otherwise. Actually they don't even seem to think that there are things more crucial to attracting quality students than providing men with available females. Somehow the women at Barnard feel differently about their school. Even in our dubious location south of Harlem, the Admissions Office has no trouble attracting applicants. In fact, the number of applications to Barnard has increased 51% over the past three years. There must be something here that attracts so many intelligent women. And it doesn't seem likely that it's the Columbia men.

The interesting thing here is that people at Columbia don't seem to realize that women come to Barnard because it is a single sex school. We come here because we want the support that we need to grow intellectually and professionally, support that can be found in a place where women are nurtured. As such an institution, Barnard attracts a specific type of woman. A coed Columbia will attract an entirely different type of woman.

It can only be hoped that, with more communication, relationships between the schools will improve and that Columbia will realize the benefits of respecting and supporting an independent Barnard, rather than attempting to undermine our school.

Barnard/Columbia Relations Song
(sung to the tune of Ding Dong the Witch is Dead)

Ding dong the merger died
Barnard Women don't have to hide
Ding dong the merger finally died

Wake up you Columbia guys
Barnard Women are finally wise
Ding dong the merger finally died

It's gone where the goblins go
Below below below yo ho
Let's sing a song cause
Ding dong the merger finally died . . .

(Speech) On this day of independence
We celebrate our mighty presence
The world shall beware
As marches on the Barnard Bear!!!!!!

BOOSTERS BOOSTERS BOOSTERS, BOOSTERS

Dave, you will always have a special place in my heart — SH

Chendy, Thanks for the good times. Success and happiness! — Susie

Yvonne, Thanks for being a good friend — Susie.

S.S.H.N. — With you, every new dawn brings a new promise
And every sunset brings a promise of new dawn. — D.Y.

Dear Sis: Congrat. Remember the fun and sharing. Love, A.S.

Dear Arlene, Dean, Tino, Chrissy, Ruth, Gres, Rei, Creator, Joe, Liz, Vera, Paula, Beth, Bill, Ed, Florica, Gordon, Pat, Paula, Erik, Isabel: Love yous all. Good luck. Augusta.

Dear Uncle Pat, Jimmy Renee, Greg: You made these years fun and a real experience. Thanks. Love Augusta.

To Frances and Debbie, Thanks for all the McIntosh lunches that turned into Mortarboard meetings. BOM couldn't have been run by two more devoted and qualified women. — C.K.

"Think where man's glory most begins and ends
And say my glory was I had such friends" W.B. Yeats
To the Mortarboard staff with love Chen

Wherever you may go, whatever you may do, be happy.
Congrats everybody! Teri H. '81

To Roe, Lisa, Nancy, Ruya, (those who have to carry the spirit); Stef, Anna, Sharon, Steve, Len, Sandy, Rick, Dan, et al (who must keep the faith) and even those like Cindy and Paula (who taught me the secrets to senior year): Thank you all for your support, your love and your friendship. You all maintain a special place in my heart (Big Grubs, Groovies, Harolds, and suities included): and have made these Barnard years two of the best. To the memories and to our future — I love you all, Vivian.
(Lisa, what did ever happen to that rug that slipped 14 flights?)

JSK — I would have never made it through without you. Only 2 more. K's and BW's always. V(McT)A

TO:

Vivian, Lenny, Dan — You guys are the biggest grubs in the whole wide world! Long live the chateau east and the mellows!

Karen, Naava, Ruth, Vivian — The best suitemates ever. Behave yourselves in Israel! Don't forget to write!

Chen — Let's go dancing!?! Oh, yes . . . Mortarboard. You've been a very special friend.

Ginny — To life and growing up. Thanks for caring!

Nancy & Ling — Oh, no! Not again! Oh, yes! Here we go again . . . He! He! He!

Theresa — May we always share our joys and sorrows, and let us remember all the fun and laughter!

Thanks to all of you and everyone else for adding so much to my four years at Barnard. I love you. I wish happiness and success!

Lastly, I want to say to Steve:

Thanks for being there. I don't know how I could have made it without you, but I'm glad I made it with you. IWUVM! IAFY!

All my love, Anna

Adena, a sparkling, happy, fulfilling future. Y. deserve it! Love, Mom, Dad, Perry, and Leah.

For Ann, Chendy, Frances, Marta

"IMAGINE . . .

All the people living for today.

You may say I'm a dreamer, but I'm not the only one, I hope someday you'll join us and the world will be as one."

— John Lennon

So many faces in and out of my life, some will last
Some will just be now and then.
Life is a series of hellos and goodbyes,
I'm afraid it's time for goodbye again.

Come in and celebrate your special day with us

Columbia University presents the "LION," a symbol of strength and endurance. The lion is also the symbol of Major Programming for the Columbia Community and is entrusted to the Board of Managers of Ferris Booth Hall. Our organization is responsible for traditional as well as innovative campus programs, which are planned and executed by students. These opportunities allow all students to use their power to create at Columbia.

Debbie Cisternino, President; Sema Tekinay, Gil Atzmon, Eric Tolkin, Frances Enrlebacher, Raul Mitrani, Tom Orit, James Altuner, Pierre Lemare.

Congratulations Seniors!

20,500 Members of
The Associate Alumnae of Barnard College
Welcome the Class of 1981 to Membership

The Associate Alumnae of Barnard College links together Barnard students and the alumnae community throughout the United States and in countries abroad. Our purpose is to promote the interests of the College and to foster a spirit of friendship and support among our members. There are no dues. Everyone who has attended Barnard for one year or more is a member. One of the ways we accomplish our purpose is through our quarterly magazine, Barnard Alumnae, which regularly reports news from all of the classes as well as the latest developments on campus.

As alumnae, you will be receiving the magazine as well as other news from the College if you keep the Alumnae Office informed of your address. If you plan to travel or move to another community, the office will be glad to help you contact alumnae in the area. Alumnae groups throughout the United States and abroad are happy to welcome newcomers and travelers. Be sure to keep in touch with Barnard through our office and send your class correspondent news of yourself and your current activities.

Congratulations to all of you!

*With the Best Wishes of
The Board of Trustees,
Barnard College*
